

Simplifying and clarifying is generally to be applauded, but the proposed changes are adding new areas, this requires great care. Where the law attempts to discourage discrimination based on something like race, which one is born with, is to be commended, but adding anti discrimination provisions for things which many in our society see as a moral choice, is going too far. This impinges on religious freedoms and the free ability to express views and discuss areas that are under the realm of religious views. This has the capacity to declare peaceful law abiding citizens as criminals for no other reason than they expressed their opinion on what they see as a moral issue. Please do not enact any laws that will have this effect.

regards

Andrew Amos

<http://kec.org.au>