

Australia used to be a great nation, and highly respected throughout the world and this under the current anti-discrimination laws. Why change, in any way, something that has been the backbone of our society. It is only as we have deviated from the core values of our Constitution that our society has degenerated.

People already have the freedom of choice, and the courts deal with people abusing this freedom. There are already so many laws that one struggles to keep up with them.

It seems to me that minority groups are the ones pushing issues and complaining about intolerance, when they are demonstrating their intolerance of anyone who has differing points of view.

Please do not change or extend our current anti-discrimination laws.

Sincerely

Di Cummings
