

Dear Sirs/madams,

I respectfully request that no further changes be made to anti-discrimination legislation. I base this on a number of reasons...

1. Existing legislation at a national and state level meets current and future needs. Adding more laws is unnecessary as what we have is sufficient.

2. We are already over governed and over legislated. Don't add to the burden.

2. The intent of such legislation is not always what is enacted in reality. The scope of it gets stretched beyond expected interpretation and ends up being counterproductive. A case that comes to mind is the 'Two Dannys' racial vilification action in Victoria.

3. People will always be pushing the boundaries, regardless of what the boundaries might be. Current issues with gender identity and teenage crises related to it are compounded by those with an agenda to promote. To change the legislation would be a major task for minimal positive outcome for a minuscule number of people.

Due to time constraints prior to the close of submissions I am unable to elaborate further but would gladly do so with more time.

I would appreciate being kept abreast of this matter via my postal address.

Yours sincerely,

Tim Young
[address removed]