As Pastafarian I support all that is good and I'm against all that is not good. R'amén

Things that are not good:
Charitable institutions and Service Providers with any form of taxpayer support should not be able to discriminate against any person who reasonably meets the criteria of eligibility for receiving those services. If my taxes contribute to those services I must be entitled to them whether or not they agree with my beliefs.

School Chaplaincy programs in government schools are proselytizing and students should not be subjected to this without specific parental authority. A public institution has no business pressing a religious agenda. Religious institutions have their own venues and times to conduct this indoctrination.

Religious references in government and public services are superfluous, inappropriate, irrelevant and intimidating. This business must be conducted using rational and factual reasoning and argument.

Religious vilification of factual qualities such as left handedness, sex, gender identity, disability, or race cannot be allowed. A religions refusal to accept facts should not exempt them from basic human decency. Religious speech should not be used to denigrate, insult, vilify, harass or otherwise interfere with a person’s legal activities.

Legally conducted medical services should not be withheld on the basis of religious beliefs held or not held. Medical science and law alone should be the basis of these decisions.

Political representatives should be required to declare if they will make their decisions in public office by using fact based reasoning or by the influence of their religious beliefs.

Things that are good:
Persons of no religion should receive the same rights and privileges as everybody else. Persons of minority religions should also be accorded the same rights and privileges as "major religions" and "no religion".

Equality for all Australians.

May you be touched by Quob’s noodley appendages.
