

I'm sorry but a 'General Blanket' control over our meta data is criminal. It goes against our rights as citizens and common law.

It should only be accessible when ppl are under surveillance for a crime, not everyone so that the security ppl can catch the occasional criminal.

This also contravenes the belief of innocent until proven guilty. Its also laziness on the part of the security ppl involved. It screams we have no idea what were doing, so were just gonna keep everyones meta data and see who we can detect, coz were too lazy to actively research ourselves.

As a famous quote says, if you give away your freedom for security, then you deserve neither".

No we do not want our emails and phones available to anyone. If we are under review, then they can get a court order. My data is NOT available to just anyone.

Cheers
