

The government's proposal is the scope creep initially warned, and specifically limited in the original legislation. Such data was promised to be used to fight criminals and terrorism, and changes to such shows the governments willingness to make criminals out of the electorate.