

To whom it may concern,

I wanted to state my discontent with the proposed alterations / extension to freedom of information laws allowing access to meta data, data, and personal information, in the absence of a warrant.

I want to make clear I have no issue with the access to this information within the confines of a warrant, however I believe allowing this to occur in the absence of a warrant is both a privacy and security risk to our country and to our citizens.

Given our government's primary statistics organisation can't procure a service management for the national senses, let alone run one themselves, I have little confidence in their ability to protect and decide which segments of our data should be accessible without a warrant.

I know that many others stand with me, and that the vast majority don't understand the effects these changes may have on them, their family and friends, along with the dangerous direction it puts us in.

I look forward to your reply to continue this discussion,

Best Regards,

Jordan

--

Jordan Green / Software Developer