

To whom it may concern

Mandatory mass data retention is already a massive violation of privacy and is already a failure in seeking to bring accused terrorists to justice. We need to get off of this slippery slope that governments beholden to corporate interests are attempting to push on us. Failures on the part of the government to accurately describe what they're collecting and obvious falsehoods about who will ever have access to the data are evident in that this is even being considered.

Do the right thing, stop treating everyday Australians as criminals, we're past that.

Yours sincerely
Peter Simpson
Perth, Western Australia