

Have you read Big Brother? The capacity for a bill like this to do harm far outweighs any good, and the potential for misuse is even greater.

If taxis are requesting access to my Metadata, is it a reasonable conclusion that private companies would do the same eventually?

I understand the appeal of being able to catch the bad guy, I do, but invading the privacy of every citizen goes contrary of a free society.

But if this does pass, carefully consider how you would prevent its misuse, not just now, but in the future.

-Sam Nicholas